

EXPERT SYSTEMS IN LAW: A JURISPRUDENTIAL APPROACH TO ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE AND LEGAL REASONING

THE purpose of this paper is to offer a general introduction to the field of Artificial Intelligence and Legal Reasoning. More specifically, the topic of Expert Systems in Law is addressed, and one approach to the construction of these systems is advocated. In Section I, possible motivations for building expert systems in law are noted. In Section II, the terms artificial intelligence and expert systems are discussed resulting, in Section III, in a characterisation of expert systems in law. In Section IV, current projects in artificial intelligence and legal reasoning are briefly surveyed and the idea of introducing jurisprudential rigour to the process of building expert systems in law is first advanced. This notion of using legal theory as a point of departure in the construction process is developed in Section V in a discussion of the concepts of legal knowledge acquisition, legal knowledge representation and legal knowledge utilisation. In the concluding Section VI, directions for further research in this field are identified and an interdisciplinary research project, currently being conducted at the University of Oxford, is described.

Although this essay is intimately concerned with an aspect of computer science, it is intended that the bulk of it will be comprehensible to those who have no knowledge of the new technology. For it is generally not necessary for the lawyer or legal theorist to understand the computer and appreciate the intricacies of logic and mathematics as does a computer scientist, a computer engineer, logician or mathematician. For the purposes of examining possible functions of computers in the legal world, the lawyer need only familiarise himself with certain crucial matters, such as the potential, the limitations, and the dangers of their introduction to legal practice and research.

I

The first 25 years of research into the application of computer technology to the law were devoted largely to the development of what are generally, but, it shall be argued, misleadingly, termed legal information retrieval systems.

Many legal practitioners and academics are now familiar with the operation and capabilities of these systems, the best known of which in the United Kingdom is LEXIS. While the precise sequence of operations to be followed in their actual use varies from system to system, ordinarily the user operates through a terminal and having initially executed various preliminary instructions in order
