

First steps into phenomenology: learning phenomenological comprehension of a therapeutic work

Rudi Kotnik

Received 29 October 2019

Abstract: This paper explores the possibilities of phenomenology within psychotherapy and particularly within Gestalt psychotherapy. Two aspects of the whole are presented: apart from psychotherapeutic applications, the aspect of pedagogy and its potential is shown and demonstrated using the concrete example of the online available therapeutic work of Dr Robert Resnick. The basic notions of phenomenology as Husserl's legacy are introduced in order to show their relevance for psychotherapy and its pedagogy. Since some notions taken from Gestalt psychology (e.g. figure/ground structure) have their origins in phenomenology, there is a question as to whether this could be a challenge for Gestalt therapy theory.

Keywords: phenomenology, Gestalt therapy, experiential learning, phenomenological notions and structures.

Introduction

The aim of this paper is focused on some lesser known but basic notions and structures of phenomenology within the context of Gestalt therapy training. I will show how their understanding and application can be helpful when trainees have difficulties in seeing the therapeutic work as a whole. When they are lost in a manifold of particularities, this understanding can help them to step back from prima facie complexity to the simplicity of the work overall in order to begin to make the transition from simplicity to complexity again. For this purpose, I shall refer to an example of therapeutic work that illustrates how to make the first steps into phenomenology with students or trainees, and to demonstrate how this understanding can contribute to the learning process of Gestalt psychotherapy training. While some of the notions will be demonstrated through this example, other basic notions still need an initial introduction. Instead of introducing them through analysis, I will describe how this understanding can be achieved experientially through the exercises in three steps.

The four step process: from simplicity to complexity

There have been several attempts to research phenomenology in a Gestalt psychotherapy context

(McComville, 2001; Robinc, 2003; Burley and Bloom, 2008; Bloom, 2009; Crocker, 2009; Brownell, 2008, 2010, 2017; Kotnik, 2011; Burley, 2012), in psychiatry (Wiggins et al., 1990; Saas, 2010; Hirjak et al., 2013,¹ Burley et al., 2015), and in other contexts (Owen, 2015); however, my interest is in the context of pedagogy, i.e. how phenomenology can be introduced to psychotherapy training in general and Gestalt psychotherapy in particular. I have used this approach with students of philosophy,² students of psychology,³ and with trainees in Gestalt psychotherapy. The process usually consists of four steps. For the purpose of this paper, the first three necessary steps will be summarised and then I will proceed to the fourth.

Step 1: 'See, Imagine, Feel'

In Step 1 the basic phenomenological notions are derived from a simple, well-known experiential exercise 'See, Imagine, Feel' (Brown, 1996, pp. 118–122). The original idea of this exercise had its own purpose. For us it has a different aim: to experience a comprehension⁴ of the basic notions. When a participant works in a pair in an active role, telling the other (in a passive role) what he or she sees, judges and feels, he or she can practise and learn the difference between judgement⁵ and description.

One of the participants (a psychology student)⁶ shared her experience of the exercise in the following way:

First Steps in Psychotherapy H. Becker, 1985-07 The contributors to this volume like many others concerned with medical education have for a long while been conscious of the fact that in the training of medical students and in the practice of medicine too little attention is being paid to the psychological aspects of illness and to the use of psychotherapy in patient care In an attempt to fill this gap medical students at University College Hospital London have since 1958 been given the opportunity on a voluntary basis to treat a patient with weekly analytically orientated psychotherapy under supervision for a year or longer In 1977 a similar scheme was started at the Psychosomatic Clinic of Heidelberg University We were fortunate in obtaining generous financial support from the European Community which has enabled teachers and students from our two universities in Great Britain and the Federal Republic of Germany to collaborate in this student psychotherapy teaching project and to compare our experiences In this book we present an account of this joint educational endeavour including our successes and our failures as well as our attempts to solve some of the problems we have encountered We decided to let individual supervisors and teachers who inevitably differed in their approach write their own contributions rather than try to present a unified picture which would not have given a fair impression of our work and experience If this has led to some repetition in the text we hope readers will appreciate the reason for it
