How does the writer portray the relationship between the two explorers?

As you read, consider the way the writer sets up independent character traits. How would you apply this to your own essay writing?

One way the writer portrays the relationship between the two explorers is through the use of tense changes and dialogue. For example, when each explorer has found what they regard as a camp, the events, "You call that here last there progress?" This direct confrontation creates a sense of conflict and animosity between the characters, highlighting the underlying tension in their relationship.

Another way the writer depicts the relationship is through use of physical descriptions and actions that set the hostile mood. One explorer over a rock and "stare[ing] reaching for her knife both serve as physical manifestations of their anger and distrust towards each other. These actions add a layer of hostility to the atmosphere, emphasizing the growing tension between the explorers.

Furthermore, the use of simile and metaphor is used to depict the overall mood of the relationship. When they continue to search through the misty forest, the writer reveals how the tension, "creaked like electricity" and "was about to ignite". The metaphorical language suggests a volatile hostility and a feeling of instability and aggression.

The passage is further described in the last paragraph as a rift. The metaphor aptly portrays the emotional distance between them and there is a sense of concern that their relationship will not survive the difficulties they face in the forbidding forest.

A final way the writer portrays the fractious relationship is through the setting of the forest itself. The dense canopy, misty air, and towering trees create the characters' sense of isolation and a feeling that their strained relationship persists. The overcast weather and the way the forest "creaked" and "boomed", creating a backdrop that parallels the explorers' deteriorating bond.

Overall, the writer's portrayal of the relationship between the two explorers through tense changes, physical actions, and the atmosphere, using effectively conveys the growing conflict and tension between the characters, drawing the reader into the volatile world of their quest.
