ABSTRACT

Many studies highlight the importance of parental involvement in the academic performance of children and adolescents across subject areas. In view of the lack of instruments in Spain to assess family involvement of parents of adolescents, we undertook this study to develop the Spanish adaptation of the Family Involvement Questionnaire - High School version (FIQ-HS). The sample consisted of 928 parents (85.7 % females) with adolescent sons and daughters. Exploratory and confirmatory factor analyses substantiated the expected three-factor structure (home-school communication, school-based activities, and home-based activities), though seven poorly functioning items were removed. The results show that this instrument has adequate psychometric properties, good reliability, and convergence with another measure of family adaptability and cohesion. Therefore, the FIQ-HS is adequate for the assessment of family involvement in Spanish parents.

La adaptación española del Cuestionario de Implicación Familiar - bachillerato: versión para padres

RESUMEN

Muchos estudios subrayan la importancia de la implicación familiar en el rendimiento académico de niños y adolescentes en diferentes materias. Teniendo en cuenta la falta de instrumentos en España para evaluar la implicación familiar de los padres de adolescentes, se ha llevado a cabo este estudio para desarrollar una adaptación española del instrumento Family Involvement Questionnaire - High School version (FIQ-HS). La muestra consistió de 928 padres (85,7% mujeres) con hijos e hijas adolescentes. Los análisis factoriales exploratorio y confirmatorio confirmaron la estructura esperada de tres factores (comunicación hogar-escuela, actividades basadas en la escuela y actividades basadas en el hogar), aunque se eliminaron siete ítems que presentaban mal funcionamiento. Los resultados muestran que este instrumento presenta unas adecuadas propiedades psicométricas, buena fiabilidad y convergencia con otra medida de adaptabilidad familiar y cohesión. Por lo tanto, el FIQ-HS es adecuado para evaluar la implicación familiar de los padres españoles.

Several studies show that various family sociodemographic factors (socioeconomic and educational level of parents, immigration, number of members in the household, etc.), or family psychosocial factors (family involvement in the children education, family satisfaction, family structure, etc.) are related to academic performance in children and adolescents (e.g., Beale & Büchner, 2013; Culyba et al., 2016). Of all these family factors, the importance of parental involvement with their child's schooling and its positive effects on the academic performance of children and adolescents across all subject areas is often highlighted (e.g., Garbace et al., 2018; Hampden-Thompson & Galindo, 2017; Serra & Martínez, 2019). For this reason, the current study focuses specifically on assessing this variable in parents with adolescents.

Parental involvement refers to parents' investment of resources in the education of their children so that they can achieve social and academic goals (Bocsek et al., 2018). These actions and activities are based on social communication processes between the family and the educational center (Epstein, 2010). Epstein (2010), who considered parental involvement to be a multifaceted construct, proposed a theoretical framework that has been widely used. Epstein (1992) proposed six types of school-related opportunities, which may help schools to enhance parent involvement: 1) assisting parents in child-rearing skills, 2) school-parent communication, 3) involving parents in school volunteer opportunities, 4) involving parents in home-based learning, 5) involving parents in school decision-making, and 6) involving parents in school-community.
