Originally constructed in 1876, the Post Hospital today is a place of solitude. It is filled with memories of the past and stories that only the walls can tell — accounts of life, suffering and pain, and survival and death.

Although Fort Davis was on the frontier, medicine was not as primitive or barbaric as one might think. Many advances in technology were made during this time and some were available at Fort Davis. Ether inhalers were used during surgery to deaden pain, an ice machine provided relief for patients with fever, and carbolic acid dispensers reduced germs and chance of infection. In later years, a telephone was installed between the post surgeon's house and the hospital.

Post hospital complex, late 1880s

Register of the Sick and Wounded, Fort Davis, September 10, 1888

Hand surgery on 27-year-old Private Henry Deam, 5th Infantry, Company I. "Contused and lacerated wound, second finger, left hand, severe. Struck with ball while playing baseball. Amputated the distal phalanx (tip joint of finger) with aseptic precautions. Anesthetic: Cocaine 4 percent oil, ice applied around seat of injury." Performed by Post Surgeon John V. Lauderdale, M.D.

Journal of Post Surgeon John Vance Lauderdale, M.D., December 26, 1888

"The [hospital] steward has put up an alarm bell in his quarters with the push button on the Hospital door so that he may be more readily reached."

Fort Davis Inspection Report, May 1888

"Assistant Surgeon D. H. Appel in charge. Hospital built of adobe, in good condition — several repairs and improvements have been made since last inspection — the wards are kept clean and well ventilated — storeroom is secure and supplies are not improperly used. [Hospital] Fund $121.21; in fund $21.32."
