

How Can We Achieve an Equitable Energy System?

Structural Equity

Decision makers recognize the historical, cultural, and institutional dynamics that have led to clean energy inequities

Procedural Equity

Decision makers create inclusive and accessible processes for developing and implementing clean energy programs

Distributional Equity

Clean energy policies and programs fairly distribute the benefits and burdens across all segments of communities

Transgenerational Equity

Decision makers consider the impact on future generations of the clean energy policies and programs they develop.

Decision-makers reform programs that perpetuate disparities and build programs that are equitable for all residents

Community members have authentic leadership roles that define, drive, and hold accountable clean energy policy and program decisions and outcomes

All residents enjoy the benefits of clean energy programs—such as lower bills, clean energy jobs, clean energy investment, and community wealth—and no community shoulders unjust burdens

Decision makers create solutions that benefit future generations and eliminate practices that could place unfair burdens on our children
