

Good Governance, Democratic Societies and Globalisation by Surendra Munshi & Biju Paul Abraham (eds.), 2004, New Delhi: Sage, pp. 424, Rs. 680.

Governance is the new buzzword in the current (and fashionable) debates on the futures of State, polity and, strangely, economy. Making sense of its meaning and usefulness, as indeed its trajectory, has not been easy, primarily for the reason that it is often presumed to be a 'given' category with a commonly agreed upon meaning and thus the task is then only one of thinking of strategies best designed to achieve good governance. Accordingly, it is a mantra that is invoked by almost everybody in the business of making states accountable - global funding agencies such as the IMF and the WB (who have been the most important peddlers of this term), the guilt-ridden states and its officials, NGOs crying hoarse about the 'failure' of the state, and the media pundits. Yet, more frustratingly, much of the academic discourse has not fared any better.

Categories, like any human creation, will have a distinct history, context and politics, and in most instances a clear idea of such specificities will prove to be an inexorable resource in thinking of ways of working with them. This edited volume, resulting from a conference organised at the Indian Institute of Management, Calcutta, is an attempt in this direction. IIMC appears to be doing a great deal of work in collaboration with scholars in Europe on the issue of governance, particularly as it relates to transformations in economy [see Darryl Reed and Sanjoy Mukherjee (eds.) 2004 Corporate Governance, Economic Reforms and Development: The Indian Experience, New Delhi: Oxford University Press]. This conference was part of an initiative called the European Union-India Economic Cross-cultural Programme, which drew participation from many European universities.

The concern of this volume is to discuss 'the issue of good governance in democratic societies in the context of globalisation' (p. 9) and thus the title of the book. In translating this concern into a workable agenda, it has sought to be comparative in approach (with scholars from Europe and India coming together to contribute papers on the European and Indian experience of economic reforms and globalisation) but also multi-disciplinary. This approach, it appears, has defined both the strengths as well as the limitations of the effort. But, first, an argumentative yet cursory summation of the work.
