

Essentials of HRM

Ans 1- Introduction to human resource management

Every organization is essentially a mixture of material and human resources (HR). Material refers to money and machinery prepared in advance by an organization for production or trade. Human resources, on the other hand, refer to the knowledge, education, skills, training, and abilities of a member of an organization. Human resources are an organization's most valuable and unique asset. Successfully managing an organization's human resources is an exciting, dynamic and challenging task, especially at a time when the world has become a global village and economies are in a state of change. Talent shortages and the growing expectations of the modern workforce have further increased the complexity of the HR function.

Achieving competitive advantage by investing in human resources

The human factor is the only resource of an organization that can create a competitive advantage. A manager should select those people who are smarter, better trained, motivated and dedicated. HR can use the data to analyze turnover rates and determine where problems may be, allowing the company to find problems and get them to Resort more quickly. Human resources expertise can enable an organization to know where to look for specialized talent when needed. HR can provide insight into current market rates for talent and what it may take to acquire high-quality employees. HR can review the competitive talent landscape and determine what compensation strategy will best meet the company's goals. HR can provide insight into how other organizations in your industry are structured, information that can be useful in determining which positions the company still needs to create or fill in order to become or remain competitive. HR can use data to show how employee skills are evolving over time and show executives where skills gaps may exist so those gaps can be proactively addressed.

Assessment of manpower requirements

Human resource planning is the basic but most important function of HR department and while planning the required manpower they have to consider various points like number of vacancies, ideal number of candidates required, best sources, how to find them, assess them on various parameters and finally select them. In this case, Sundaram Ltd is opening more branches and no doubt it would require more people to manage the same so that the HR department steps in and assesses the possible number of people required to manage the new branches. For example, if a company is opening 10 new branches and around 25 people are needed in one branch, the HR
