INTRODUCING THE CONCEPT OF MANAGEMENT

- A hundred years ago, most organizations were relatively small, and their focus was upon productivity and techniques, with little analysis of the underlying principles of management. Since then, organizations have grown in size and multiplied in numbers.
- The vast majority of people are employed by some sort of an organization. The growth in the number of people working in organizations was accompanied by a growth in interest in management.
- Through passage of time people found that they could magnify their own abilities by working with others and could thereby better satisfy their own needs in organized manner.
- Management techniques had not been very important when
