

Propagation: In this step continuous addition of ethylene molecule into newly generated carbocation in each addition to give long chain continuous addition polymer chain.

Termination:

The termination steps involve loss of proton resulting in the formation of double bond at the end of the polymer chain.

c). Anionic polymerization:

Analogous to the initiation of anionic polymerization by addition of nucleophiles to alkenes, cationic polymerization can be initiated by the addition of electrophiles. The alkenes that respond well to cationic polymerization are those that form relatively stable carbocation when protonated.

Initiation: In the anionic polymerization reaction initiator is a nucleophile or base which adds to the double bond of ethylene to forms intermediate carbanion. This formed carbanion reacts with another molecule of ethylene. Thus chain initiated.

Propagation: In this step continuous addition of ethylene molecule into newly generated carbanion in each addition to give long chain continuous addition polymer chain.
