

Primary Functions of Accounting

- Recording data about business transactions- In the Egyptian era they used a quill pen to record the data and stored it on papyrus scrolls. Today we might use a bar code and scan data into a computer system and store it on a magnetic disk.
- Summarizing results of business activity into useful report- The balance sheet and income statement have been standard reports for many years. More recently we added a statement of cash flows. However, managers in today's environment demand more detailed reports like sales by district or sales by product type.
