Costing and Financing in Developing Countries Jean Claude Eicher,1984 This paper analyzes issues in the costs and financing of education in developing countries It focuses primarily on sub Saharan Africa and within that on Francophone West Africa After evaluating the educational cost data used in international comparisons the paper focuses on the special situation of African countries most of which experience severe financial constraints in their effort to achieve educational goals It examines the potential for reducing unit costs as a way of increasing enrollment within an existing budget and tapping private sources of financing for education The overall conclusion is that although the financial prospects are rather bleak in the poorest countries existing budgets could be used much more efficiently than at present Unit costs can often be significantly reduced and some changes in the pattern of subsidies to education may allow for a sizeable expansion of education within existing budgets The Costs and Financing of Education Mark Bray,2002 This volume is part of the series Education in Developing Asia It examines the trends and policy implications of education finance

Funding Mechanisms for Higher Education Douglas Albrecht,Adrian Ziderman,1992 This discussion paper examines mechanisms through which governments allocate resources to higher education particularly in developing countries in order to establish effective means to transfer these subsidies to institutions The discussion of funding mechanisms develops within the context of three major types of government restrictions which have had an impact on institutional behavior 1 controlling student enrollments 2 imposing high financial dependency on universities through prohibiting revenue diversification and 3 imposing restrictions on the extent to which institutions are able to allocate their funding as they see fit These restrictions have resulted in institutional deterioration The challenge is to find a way to grant universities more autonomy over decision making while ensuring accountability to the providers of the funding One solution is seen in the use of buffer funding bodies that lie between the government and the institutions Another solution is to change the criteria for allocation of resources The paper goes on to review the experience with different categories of funding criteria The paper also looks at Chile s approach which has been to transfer funds via students through loans or grants rather than directly to institutions Included are numerous tables and 38 references JB

Good Practice in Cost Sharing and Financing in Higher Education Asian Development Bank,2009-12-01 Higher education will have increasing importance in channeling human resources to support social development and economic growth but faces resource constraints and competing priorities in ADB s developing member countries DMCs Sudden and large shifts of government financing to higher education in DMCs may derail adequate funds for basic and secondary education. It is thus critical that new paradigms be found for financing higher education. With its well developed framework for planning project preparation and analysis and its excellent track record in education ADB is well positioned to provide leadership in this important area. This good practice guide focuses on policy options strategies and practical tools for identifying and obtaining information to feed into country specific dialogue concerning funding shortfalls and innovative methods of higher education finance including partnerships with the private sector.

The World Bank Research Observer, 1993 Higher Education and Global Poverty Christopher S. Collins, 2011 This study is founded on several case studies which examine countries including Thailand and Uganda where impact analyses were done on World Bank loans dedicated to the expansion of higher education in science and technology. These two countries were chosen because they are in two different regions with dissimilar colonial histories and their loans are relatively recent. A case study on crossborder university partnerships also provides a model which other universities and development agencies may utilize when positioning higher education as a poverty reduction strategy. Delivering extensive frontline information on education international development and the challenges that follow this book also includes a review of poverty reduction strategies as well as a theoretical framework that covers colonialism development and indigenous knowledge. This research conducted on the World Bank and the impact of its policies in two developing countries offers primary source information on work related to the topic. A major portion of the book looks at the effort put forth by U S universities in partnership with universities in developing countries for the purpose of using knowledge creation and dissemination as a poverty reduction strategy. The policy recommendations presented are useful for international development agencies like the World Bank and the model demonstrated can be used by universities interested in cross border partnerships across lines of economic development. This book will be invaluable to educational researchers qualitative and ethnographic researchers international development specialists and scholars in international education.
