

Types of Stocks

Growth Stocks

Usually in new or fast-growing industries and have the potential to give shareholders greater returns; however, they are the most volatile class of stock and may be just as likely to go down in price.

Value Stocks

Those of companies with growth potential that are currently selling at a low price relative to their intrinsic value. It can take time for their true value to be reflected by their price.

Income Stocks

Generally not expected to appreciate greatly in share price, but typically pay steady dividends. Utilities are an example of companies that have historically been considered income-oriented.

Blue Chip Stocks

Stocks of large, well-known companies with good reputations and strong records of profit growth. They are considered safe investments as they generally generate dividends.

Penny Stocks

Inexpensive but risky speculative stocks issued by companies with short or erratic performance histories. Their low price nets a small loss in exchange for the potential for explosive growth.
