Encounters With Buddhism:

Encounters with Buddhism Shravasti Dhammika,1990 The American Encounter with Buddhism, 1844-1912

Thomas A. Tweed,2005-10-12 In this landmark work Thomas Tweed examines nineteenth century America's encounter with one of the world's major religions Exploring the debates about Buddhism that followed upon its introduction in this country Tweed shows what happened when the transplanted religious movement came into contact with America's established culture and fundamentally different Protestant tradition The book first published in 1992 traces the efforts of various American interpreters to make sense of Buddhism in Western terms Tweed demonstrates that while many of those interested in Buddhism considered themselves dissenters from American culture they did not abandon some of the basic values they shared with their fellow Victorians In the end the Victorian understanding of Buddhism even for its most enthusiastic proponents was significantly shaped by the prevailing culture Although Buddhism attracted much attention it ultimately failed to build enduring institutions or gain significant numbers of adherents in the nineteenth century Not until the following century did a cultural environment more conducive to Buddhism's taking root in America develop In a new preface Tweed addresses Buddhism's growing influence in contemporary American culture

Encounter with Buddhism Moti Lal Pandit,2005

Description The main purpose of writing this book is not only to explain but also to interpret the three phases of development of Buddhist thought in India and how and in what manner it spread out to countries as far away from the land of its origin as Japan Though the subject may be vast a conscious effort has been made of explaining the complexity of Buddhist philosophical thought in as concise terms as possible The first five hundred years which constitute the initial phase of development is that of consolidation The form of Buddhism that developed during this phase is at present known as Theravada and is prevalent in countries that lie to the south of India On account of this geographical location of Theravada countries it is also known as the Southern Buddhism The second phase of Buddhism is characterised by the emergence of Mahayana All those religious features were brought into Buddhism with the inception of Mahayana that are constitutive of folk religiosity One of the important religious elements that crept into the Buddhist fold was the doctrine of Bodhisattva Henceforward it would be the Bodhisattva ideal that would catch the imagination of a Buddhist believer At the philosophical level two most important schools were established namely the Madhyamika and the Yogacara Vijnanavada Great strides in the realm of art were also made particularly in architecture sculpture and painting The final phase of development is represented by the emergence of Tantricism At this phase of development archaic religious elements in the shape of magic became part and parcel of Buddhist practice Thus begins the process of degeneration of the ideals that the Buddha had enunciated at the time of his Enlightenment This story of rise and fall of development and degeneration tells its own story which needs to be told in terms that are understandable
